This course surveys some of the major developments in United States history from 1865 to the 1970s. Among the subjects to be covered are the struggles for justice of African Americans and women; the expanding scope and power of the federal government; and the increasing engagement of the United States with the world.

Course Requirements

There will be three class meetings each week. There will be two pre-recorded lectures available on the course website. The third meeting (check your schedule for the day and time) will be a discussion section in real time on Zoom led by one of the teaching assistants or by Professor Rosenberg. The weekly discussion sections in which students will get together (virtually) in small groups on either Tuesday or Friday from 12:10-1:00 to discuss the assigned readings are an essential part of the course. The discussion sections provide the opportunity to consider closely many of the key topics and themes that are presented in the lectures. Sections will also focus on the skills necessary to write the two papers. Students are required to attend the discussion sections and to contribute to the conversation. Readings should be completed prior to the section meeting.

You will be required to write two short papers based on the material covered in the lectures, discussion sections, and the course readings. (No additional reading is required to write the two papers.) The first paper (3 pages) will be worth 35% of your grade; the second paper (4 pages) will worth 65% of your grade. To pass the course, students must submit both papers. If a student does not submit both papers, it will not be possible to pass the course. Papers submitted after the due date and time will be penalized 10 points per day. This applies to the first paper only. Late papers will not be accepted for the second paper.

Note the Learning Outcomes for this class: Students will be expected to be able to periodize the history of the United States from the era of Reconstruction through the Vietnam War and be familiar with key themes and some of the leading groups and individuals active during those years. Students will be expected to analyze and interpret primary sources. Students will be expected to understand and write about the different ways in which historians have interpreted the period covered by the course.
