

PROGRAMS THAT PROVIDE SERVICES TO SUPPORT FAMILY VISITING OF CHILDREN IN FOSTER CARE

Visiting between children in care and their families has long been identified as a planned intervention “at the heart of reunification services” (Hess & Proch 1993). Visiting is essential to maintaining parent-child and other family attachments as well as to reducing the sense of abandonment that children experience at placement (Beyer 1999; Fanshel & Shinn 1978; Haight, Kagle, & Black 2003; Hess 1982, 1987; Hess & Proch 1988, 1993; Littner 1975; Weinstein 1960; Wright 2000). In addition, studies have found a relationship between the frequency of parent-child visiting and children’s well-being while in care (Borgman 1985; Cowan & Stout 1939; Fanshel & Shinn 1978; Weinstein 1960). Studies have also consistently found that parental visiting frequency is strongly associated with the outcomes of placement (Davis, Landsverk, Newton, & Granger 1996; Fanshel & Shinn 1978; Lawder, Poulin, & Andrews 1985; Milner 1987; Sherman, Neuman & Shyne 1973) and the length of stay in care (Mech 1985).

However, findings from the federal Child and Family Services Reviews found that 20 of the 50 states neither achieved substantial conformity nor demonstrated strength in the area of “Facilitating Visitation of Children in Care with Parents and Siblings” (Children’s Bureau 2001, 2002, 2003-2004). Although family visiting is a core reunification service, planning and implementing visits is time-consuming and is easily undermined by a lack of agency resources, such as insufficient funding for adequate staff. Therefore, public child welfare agencies often purchase visiting services from other agencies and service providers.

To provide a resource for child welfare professionals the National Resource Center for Family-Centered Practice and Permanency Planning has established a database of agencies and programs providing services that help children in foster care visit with their families. The purposes of the database are to (1) support child welfare agency staff in the identification of visiting programs that might be resources for children in care and their families, and (2) assist agencies and professionals that are interested in developing visiting services in identifying and contacting programs that provide the types of services they wish to develop, thereby supporting the further development of such services.

The database was compiled by contacting state foster care managers to request information about visiting programs in their states as well as by contacting members of the Supervised Visitation Network (www.svnetwork.net) to identify member programs that provide visiting services to foster children and their families. Programs were then contacted directly to request information about their services. It should be noted that inclusion of a program or agency in this listing is based solely upon the program's response to the inquiries made by a NRCFCPPP consultant and does not constitute an endorsement of the program. The current accuracy of the information provided cannot be guaranteed.

Program information listed includes:

- the location of responding visiting programs by state,
- each program's contact person and contact information, and
- the specific nature of an agency's services when this information was provided.

Program location and contact information is provided for 109 programs in 36 states. Some programs provide visiting services only, while others are located within large family service agencies, agencies addressing domestic violence, YWCA/YMCAs, universities, and a children's museum (Families Together, Providence Children's Museum in RI). The majority (59) of these (25 states) responded to a request to provide information regarding the specific visiting services that the program offers to children in foster care and their families. In the database, the services column is not completed for those agencies that did not provide specific services information.

Of the 59 programs providing service-specific information, the majority offer ON-SITE (agency-based) supervised visits between foster children and family members, including

- supervision of entire visits on-site – 96.6%
- intermittent or periodic supervision of visits on-site – 59.3%

Less than half (40.7%) offer ON-SITE therapeutic/facilitated/coached visits to address conditions contributing to a child's placement. One program, Reunity House in South Orange, NJ, provides supervised overnight visits on-site.

Fewer of the programs that identified specific visiting services provide OFF-SITE supervised visits in public places and/or a child's parent's or relative's home:

- supervision of entire visits at public sites (i.e. parks) – 40.7%
- supervision of entire visits at child's parent's or relative's home – 32.2%
- intermittent/periodic supervision of visits at public sites – 28.8%
- intermittent/periodic supervision of visits at child's parent's or relative's home – 25.4%
- therapeutic/facilitated/coached visits at child's parent's or relative's home – 25.4%
- therapeutic/facilitated/coached visits at public sites – 25.4%

OTHER visit-related services offered by agencies that identified their services include:

- visit transfer/exchange services – 76.3% (Transfer/exchange services provide a supervised, secure, and neutral place for a child to be dropped off for a visit and picked up following the visit.)
- reports to the court regarding visiting of foster child by family members – 76.3%
- group multiple-family visits monitored by multiple supervisors – 35.6%
- transportation of foster children to/from visits – 35.6%

More than three-quarters (76.3%) of the 59 programs providing specific information stated that the agency has developed a manual about its visiting services, and 61.0% stated that the agency has conducted a program evaluation of its services.
