Hunter College
History 361: America and the World in the Twentieth Century
(Spring 2024)

Professor Jonathan Rosenberg
jonathan.rosenberg@aol.com
Office Hours: TBA

This class considers the interconnections between the United States and the twentieth-century world. In examining the trajectory of America’s foreign engagement during the last century, we will focus on how and why the United States and its people interacted as they did with other nations and peoples in the last century. We will also explore the ways in which developments overseas helped shape aspects of American domestic life. Our goal, in short, is to reflect on America's impact on the world and, at the same time, to ponder how the wider world influenced life in twentieth-century America.

On Tuesdays, we will meet in person from 11:30-12:45. At the Tuesday meetings, we will discuss the material that has been assigned for that week, which comprises readings of primary and secondary sources, and pre-recorded lectures. These activities should be completed prior to the Tuesday meeting, which will allow for a stimulating and enlightening discussion. To access the pre-recorded lectures, go to: link TBA.

In addition to completing the readings and watching the lectures, you will be required to write two papers based on the activities we have engaged in throughout the semester (readings, lectures, and discussions). No additional reading will be required to write the two papers; that is, all papers will draw on material you have encountered in the class. The first paper (approx. 4-5 pages) is worth 30% of your grade; the second paper (approx. 8-9 pages) is worth 60% of your grade. Class participation will count for 10% of your grade. To pass the course, students must submit both papers. If a student does not submit the two papers, it will not be possible to pass the course. Papers submitted after the due date and time will be penalized 10 points per day or partial day that the paper is late. For the first paper, no late papers will be accepted after a date specified. For the second assignment, no late papers will be accepted. That is, all papers must be submitted by the deadline.

Short weekly assignment: For every Tuesday meeting, I would like each student to write one short paragraph (4-5 sentences) on one or two things that you found to be historically significant in that week’s reading. This is intended to help you organize your thoughts for the class discussion. This will not be handed in, but I will ask a few students to read aloud their paragraph. The aim of this short assignment is to help you reflect on what you think is historically important in the reading.

Course Learning Outcomes for this class: Students will be expected to be able to periodize the history of twentieth-century U.S. foreign relations. They will be expected to know certain key themes and concepts in that history. Students will be expected to read critically and analyze in writing the assigned texts, and to know something about the important historiographical developments in U.S. foreign relations history. Students will learn how to use the required material (readings, lectures, and content of the class discussions) to write clear, persuasive, and grammatically correct essays. In so doing, the class will focus on the keys to good academic writing: conceptualizing a thoughtful historical essay; composing a clear introduction that includes an effective thesis statement; building an effective argument in the body of the essay; and writing a convincing conclusion.
