DIRECTOR'S COMMENTS

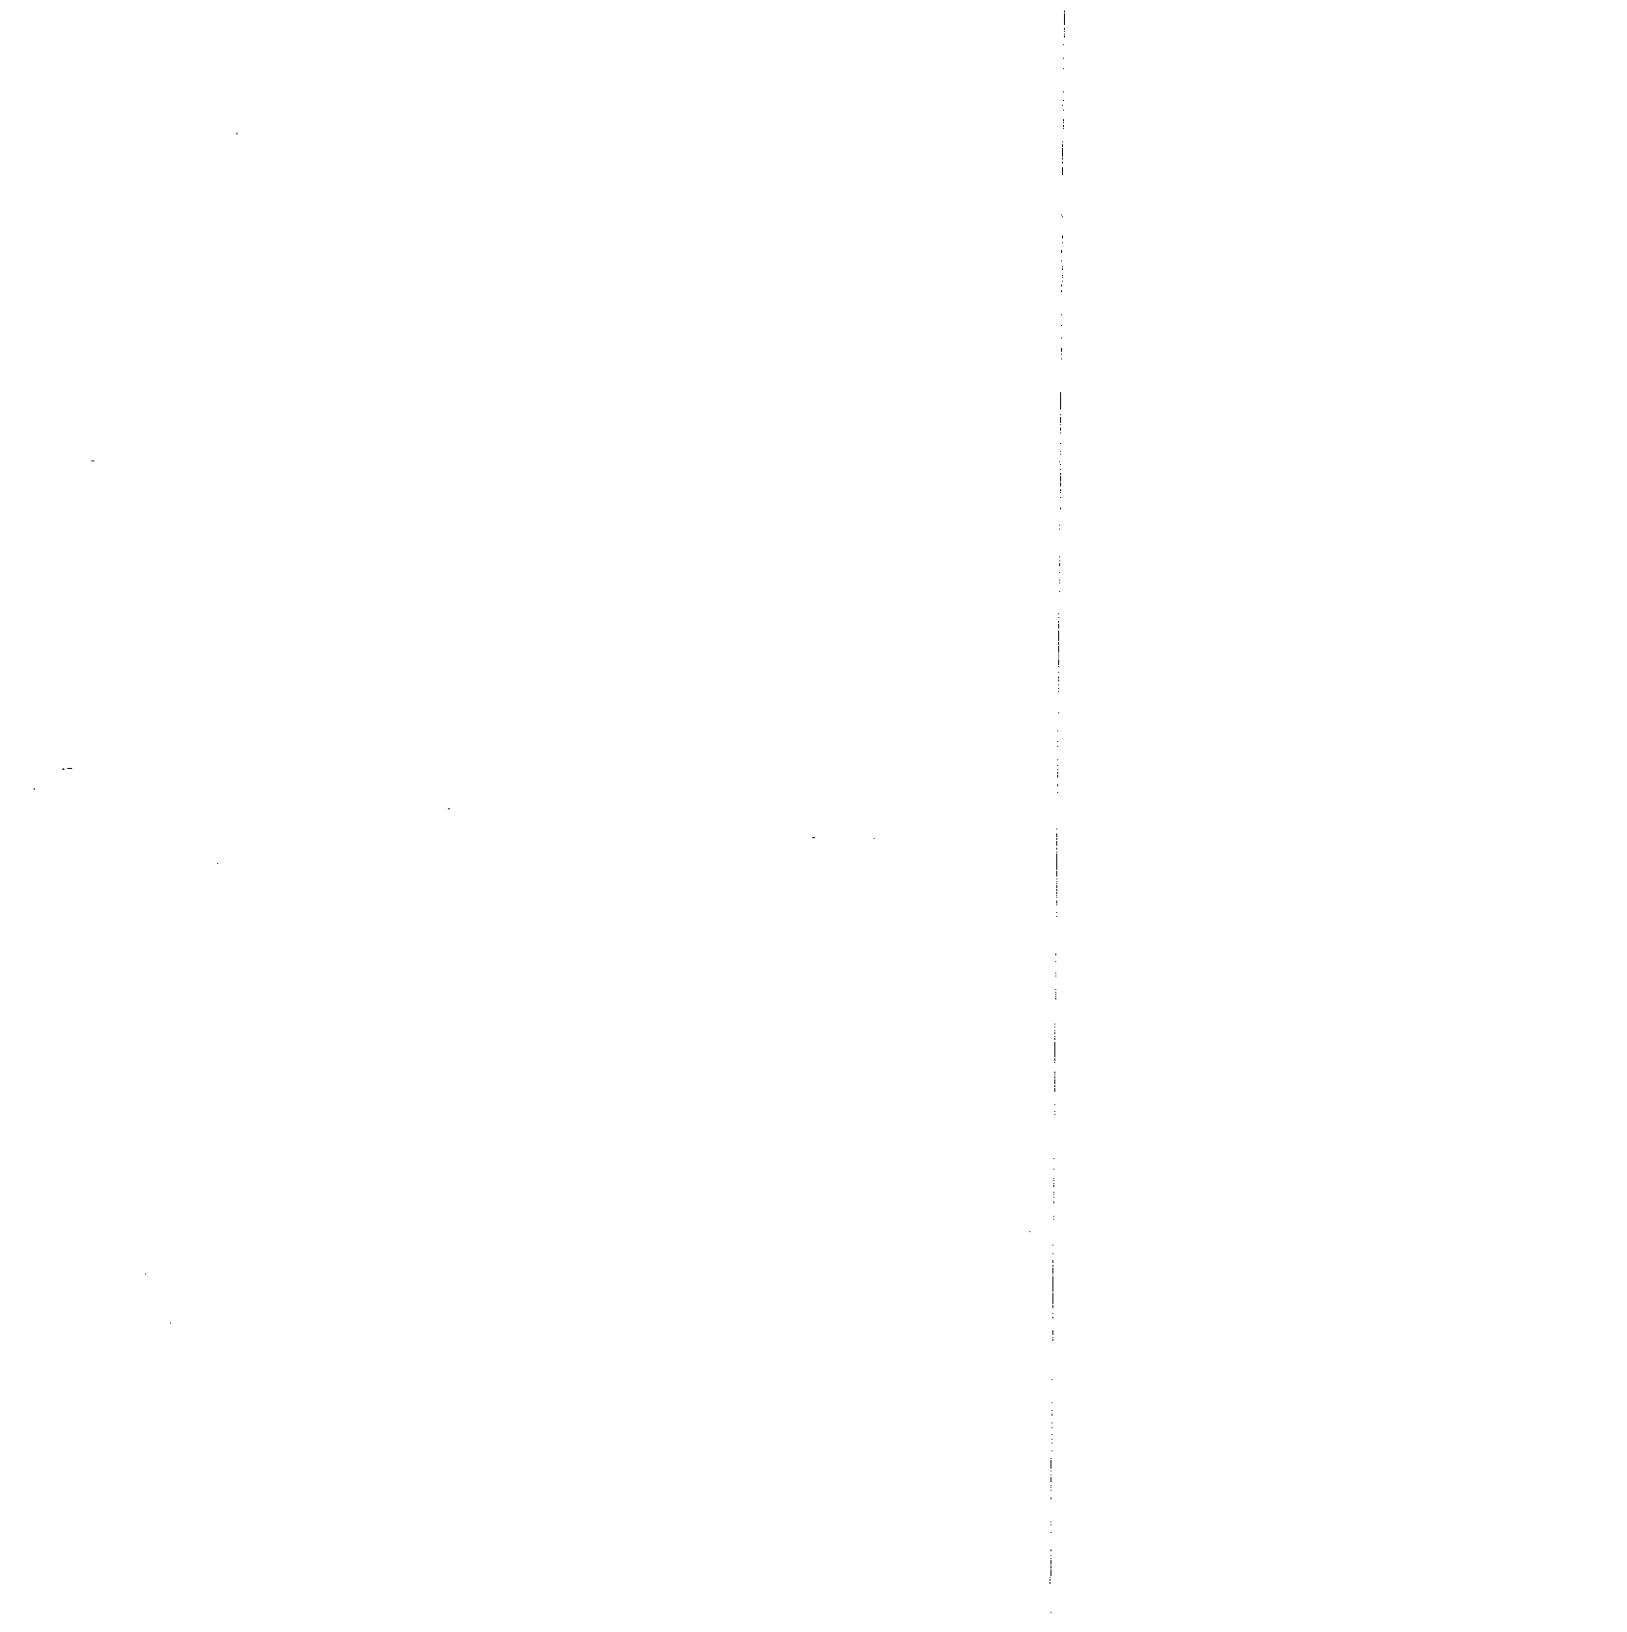

The National Center for the Study of Collective Bargaining in Higher Education and the Professions is proud and delighted to present you with this Directory of Staff Bargaining Agents in Institutions of Higher Education. Through this work, Rick Hurd and Kim Fellows have made a very significant contribution to our understandings of the rapidly growing phenomenon of staff collective bargaining at colleges and universities. This Directory will prove to be an invaluable resource for researchers and practitioners of higher education labor relations. While unionization appears stagnant or in decline throughout the United States economy, the data in this work affirms its strong growth among staff members at the academy.

When this volume is studied in conjunction with the National Center's annual Director of Faculty Contracts and Bargaining Agents In Institutions of Higher Education, a complete picture of the extent of unionization on the nation's campuses can be ascertained. Rick and Kim's study meticulously describes, details, and analyzes five categories of staff bargaining unit: clerical, professional/technical, white collar mixed, blue collar, and white/blue collar mixed. Of course, for more than 20 years the National Center has published our annual survey on faculty contracts and bargaining agents in higher education. The two works complement each other splendidly. The careful reader will easily see the similarities and differences in the extent and size of collective bargaining units, geographical distribution, and the number of unions involved between higher education faculty and staff collective bargaining.

We hope that you will be as excited with this new Directory of Staff Bargaining Agents in Institutions of Higher Education as we are at the National Center. We are grateful to Rick Hurd and Kim Fellows for sharing their research with us and permitting the National Center to publish it.

INTRODUCTION

Introduction: Unionization Among Staff in Higher Education 1992-1994

I. Background and Research Methodology

Unionization of staff in institutions of higher education attracted national attention during the 1980's, largely because of highly visible campaigns at Ivy League institutions - blue collar workers at Cornell and clerical workers at Yale, Columbia and Harvard all voted in favor of union representation. Although media attention has faded, organizing successes continue to accumulate. Building on their win at Harvard, the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) added two large locals, a 2200 member unit at the University of Illinois in 1991 and a 3200 member unit at the University of Minnesota in 1993. The Communications Workers of America (CWA) also won elections in two large bargaining units, 1700 clerical and technical workers at Indiana University in 1993, and 4000 research technicians at the University of California in 1994.

Despite the emerging importance of unionization among staff in institutions of higher education over the past fifteen years, there has been little research on this topic with the exception of a few case studies. Recognizing the need for more accurate information on the collective bargaining status of staff, the National Center initiated a project to gather relevant data in 1989. A survey was conducted that year, and the results were published in January 1991 as the Directory of Non-Faculty Bargaining Agents in Institutions of Higher Education.

In 1992 funding for a comprehensive follow up to the 1989 survey was secured from the Institute of Collective Bargaining (ICB) at the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations, Cornell University. The new survey was administered in cooperation with the National Center, and with the additional funding it was possible to augment substantially the information published in the 1991 Directory.¹ A decision was reached to limit the project to the 2722 institutions of higher education with student enrollments of 500 or more as listed in the 1992 Higher Education Directory.² During 1992 and 1993 mail surveys were sent to all of these institutions, with two follow-up mailings to non-respondents. During 1993 and 1994 telephone interviews were conducted with those who had not returned mail surveys, and with those whose responses required clarification. Ultimately a 92.8 percent response rate was achieved. This directory lists all collective bargaining agents as reported to us by the institutions. Because more than two years elapsed from the start of the project to its completion, we expect that some of the information we report is no longer fully accurate. Updates and corrections are invited.

II. Union Representation of Staff

The 1992-94 survey located substantially greater union representation than was reported in the 1991 Directory. The bargaining units for which we have complete data represent 373,216 workers, 125,181 more than confirmed four years ago.³ The higher number reflects both increased membership and more complete information. Staff union membership exceeds faculty union membership as of 1993 (the midpoint of this survey) by 138,646. However, faculty on 1057 campuses are represented by collective bargaining agents, while staff bargaining agents are present on only 881 campuses (106 more than reported in 1991). Overall, 34.9 percent of the 2527 campuses responding to the survey reported at least one staff bargaining unit.

There is substantial variation in the extent of staff unionization by region, sector, and occupation. Geographically, staff are much more likely to be represented by unions in the northeast, the midwest and on the Pacific coast than in the rest of the country. The public sector is much more heavily unionized, with 47.9 percent of public sector campuses reporting one or more staff bargaining agent, compared to 17.3 percent of private sector campuses. By broad occupational grouping, 42.8 percent of blue collar workers are unionized compared to 37.2 percent of clerical workers and 14.8 percent of professional and technical employees. Although there are many unions which represent some staff on college and university campuses, two have emerged as dominant: AFSCME and the Service Employees International Union (SEIU). The remaining sections of the introduction provide a more detailed look at the extent and variety of staff collective bargaining representation.

III. Geographic Distribution

Staff unions are highly concentrated geographically. Campuses reporting staff collective bargaining are concentrated in four regions, which account for 84.4 percent of all units: New England, Middle Atlantic, Pacific, and East North Central. As reported in Table 1, over 50 percent of the campuses which responded to the survey report staff unions in the New England, Middle Atlantic, and Pacific regions. Although the East North Central and West North Central regions have lower levels of representation, unions have nonetheless achieved a notable presence there as well. The other four regions have much lower rates of staff unionization, bottoming out in the East South Central and West South Central regions with a combined rate of 3.3 percent.

The three regions with high staff unionization rates (New England, Middle Atlantic, Pacific) account for 63.8 percent of the campuses with staff units and 66.1 percent of staff employees with union representation. The two regions with lower but substantial staff unionization rates (East North Central and West North Central) account for 29.6 percent of the campuses and 26.0 percent of the represented workers. The four low staff unionization regions (East South Central, West South Central, South Atlantic, Mountain) account for 6.6 percent of the campuses and 7.9 percent of the represented workers. Regional data are presented in Table 1 (campuses with staff unions) and Table 2 (workers represented by staff unions).

IV. Types of Bargaining Units

Staff bargaining units comprise a broad range of occupational groupings. For this directory staff units have been divided into five categories: clerical, professional/technical, white collar mixed, blue collar, and white/blue collar mixed. Table 2 contains information on the number of staff employees in these five categories of units by geographic region. The estimated total number of employees with union representation in white collar units is 191,541. The estimated number of employees with union representation in blue collar units is 100,276. There are 89,988 employees in white collar/blue collar mixed units. Clearly, in terms of absolute numbers, more white collar employees are unionized than blue collar employees in higher education.

Federal data on the number of employees in higher education by broad occupational groups facilitates more careful investigation of this aspect of staff unionization. Table 3 uses information from the U.S. Department of Education to estimate the percent of unionization for various types of staff employees. The estimated number of employees covered by staff collective bargaining agreements and their percentages are as follows: 131,232 blue collar employees or 42.8 percent; and 250,573 white collar employees or 23.4 percent. Among white collar employees, clerical workers are more likely to be represented by unions than are professional and technical employees: 153,462 clerical employees, or 37.2 percent, and 97,111 professional/technical employees, or 14.8 percent. These data indicate a much higher rate of blue collar unionization in higher education than was evident in the 1991 directory. It appears that a major gap in the earlier survey was underreporting of blue collar bargaining agents.

There is notable variation among the regions regarding the occupational makeup of bargaining units, as reflected in Table 2. Two of the regions with substantial levels of staff unionization stand out. In the Pacific region, 35.6 percent of staff with collective bargaining representation are in clerical units, compared to 20.2 percent for the rest of the nation. The Pacific region also has a much lower share of its represented staff in blue collar units, with 13.4 percent compared to 32.8 percent for all other regions combined. The West North Central stands out because a relatively high share of its unionized staff are in mixed white and blue collar units, with 40.5 percent compared to 22.3 percent for the other regions. The West North Central Region as a correspondingly lower share of represented workers in white collar units, with 26.8 percent compared to 51.9 percent for the rest of the country.

V. Sectoral Variation

Tables 4-6 provide details of the dramatic differences in unionization within and between the public and private sectors. Comparing Tables 4 and 5, the public sector accounts for the lion's share of staff union representation with 84.6 percent of the unionized employees. Concentrating on the total membership by occupational category, the public sector share is higher for white collar and mixed units than for blue collar units. In fact, employees in blue collar units make up 47.7 percent of unionized private sector staff compared to only 22.4 percent of unionized public sector staff.

Table 6 reveals that rates of public sector union representation vary dramatically by region, ranging from 0.9 percent of campuses with at least one bargaining unit in the East South Central to 96.6 percent of campuses with at least one bargaining unit in the Middle Atlantic.⁴ Although the pattern of regional variation on private sector campuses is similar to the public sector, the percent of campuses with a bargaining unit is much lower. It is notable that the Pacific region joins with New England and the Middle Atlantic in having staff bargaining units on over 90 percent of public sector campuses, but falls well below these two regions in private sector comparisons.

Although geographic concentration of staff bargaining units in the public sector may be attributed to the absence of enabling legislation in many of the states which are located in the regions with low levels of representation, it turns out that private sector unionization is even more concentrated with no such explanation. Two regions, New England and Middle Atlantic, account for 75.4 percent of staff represented by unions at private institutions of higher education. Although these two regions also have the highest percent of public campuses with bargaining units, they only account for 24.6 percent of staff represented by unions at public institutions.

VI. National Unions Which Represent Staff in Higher Education

Faculty employees are represented almost exclusively by only three different national unions: the American Association of University Professors, the American Federation of Teachers (AFT), and the National Education Association (NEA). In the case of staff, there is much greater variation. Nearly fifty different national unions represent subgroups of staff in higher education. Despite this plethora of unions, AFSCME and the SEIU account for the bulk of the unionization. AFSCME, with 166,714 bargaining unit members, represents 44.7 percent of unionized staff; the SEIU, with 52,142 unit members represents another 23.0 percent. Thus the two of them account for over two-thirds of organized staff. Both AFSCME and SEIU represent many different types of units, from small blue collar locals to very large systemwide units.

The fifteen unions with the most bargaining unit members in higher education are listed in Table 7. The third largest is the American Nurses Association with 21,236 members of bargaining units, mostly nurses in hospitals associated with medical colleges. Both the AFT and the NEA have substantial staff membership, a natural outgrowth of their presence in higher education as faculty bargaining agents. There are several unions with primarily blue collar membership: the Teamsters (IBT), the Laborers (LIUNA), the Hotel Employees (HERE) and the Operating Engineers (IUOE). Two major national unions which have targeted higher education for organizing in recent years with some success are the CWA and the Automobile Workers (UAW); both have a range of units which parallels the AFSCME and SEIU mix.

VII. Summary and Conclusions

The foothold established by unions among staff employees at institutions of higher education appears to be secure. The 1992-94 survey which provides the basis for this Directory uncovered significantly more union representation than had been documented previously. There are now reliable estimates of rates of unionization by occupational group. The extent of clerical workers' unionization reported in the 1991 Directory has been confirmed, and information about the unionization of blue collar employees in higher education has been expanded. High rates of union representation at public institutions in the northeast and on the west coast have been documented. The geographic concentration of unionization among private sector institutions in the northeast has been discovered. In the future, practitioners and researchers undoubtedly will continue to monitor union organizing in higher education and will learn whether the public sector's near saturation in some regions will migrate into the heartland and the south, at least to the extent feasible under public bargaining laws. It will also be interesting to see whether unions can achieve organizing success at private sector institutions outside of the northeast. Hopefully, the information presented in this Directory will prove useful as a benchmark.

Endnotes for Introduction

1. A 1991 project (also funded by the ICB) to clean and analyze data from the 1989 survey had uncovered significant gaps in the information collected. At this point the author and the National Center agreed to seek funding for the comprehensive second survey.
2. Rodenhouse, Mary Pat. 1992 Higher Education Directory (Higher Education Publications: Falls Church, Virginia, 1991)
3. The figures for total workers represented by unions reported in Tables 2-5 are higher than mentioned here because they include estimated membership for those campuses which did not respond to the survey, and for those which reported bargaining units but did not include unit size. The estimates are based on actual union membership on similar campuses in the same state. Details of the estimating process are available from the author. Note that the estimated total is only 8589 higher (about 2.3 percent) than the firm figure based on survey responses.
4. Note that the percent of campuses with bargaining units does not reflect the percent of workers represented on these campuses. One small bargaining unit on a campus qualifies it to be categorized in this way even if most employees are not represented by a bargaining agent.

1. For multi-campus institutions bargaining units listed opposite the institution are multi-campus units; bargaining units listed opposite a specific campus are individual campus units. Institutions denoted by an * are private sector, all others are public sector.
2. Occupational abbreviations should be reasonably clear; BC stands for blue collar, WC stands for white collar. Contact the author if there are any questions.
3. Where the year the bargaining agent was elected is not available, the year of the first collective bargaining agreement is reported in this column.
4. State law does not provide for a full collective bargaining relationship, but informal bargaining with memoranda of understanding is permitted.
5. This institution did not respond to the 1992-94 survey. The information reported is based on the 1989 survey response.
6. This institution did not submit a complete response to the 1992-94 survey. The information reported is based on the incomplete 1992-94 response combined with the 1989 survey response.
7. The agent listed bargains with a contractor who provides services on campus under agreement with the institution.
